

Reducing the prevalence of hunger in the world does not only imply increasing the amount of food produced. Agroecology promotes the construction of more harmonious relationships between food production and consumption, intending to realise the Human Right to Adequate Food and Nutrition